AWARDED FORD TRACTOR FRANCHISE:

Open House For O.K. Motors To Mark Fifth Anniversary

Anniversary celebrations will take place at O. K. Motors Limited in Lac la Biche this Saturday, April 30. Mike Fedorow and staff are celebrating the firm's fifth anniversary and the grand opening of the garage's Ford Tractor and Implement franchise.

Mike's wife, Ruth, who is co-owner and co-operator of the garage, joins him in inviting the people of Lac la Biche and district for refreshments and films in the Memorial Hall at 2 p.m. and a dance in the evening.

O.K. Motors was built by Alex Tomnuk in 1952 and was purchased by Mike in April, 1955. Mike received the Ford-Monarch franchise in May, 1955.

In June, 1957, he married local Ruth Gray, who was on the staff of St. Catherine's hospital for five years. They purchased Paul Lasky's share of the business in August, 1957, leaving Mike and Ruth sole owners and operators.

Mike built a home that summer of 1957, a solid indication of his intention to stay in Lac la Biche.

Albert Stratichuk of Hylo joined the staff of O.K. Motors as Sales Manager in February, 1959.

The firm is pleased to have received the Ford Tractor and Implement franchise. The owners plan to stay in Lac la Biche, hoping to grow with the town, and give their customers the best service they possibly can.

To Send Resolution To Local Member

The Spruce Valley FUA Local 330 held a successful meeting at the Spruce Valley Hall on April 21 at which there were 50 people present.

There was a misunderstanding about dates as to when Mr. Godel, district agriculturist of Athabasca, was to speak and show a large number of slides. Mr. Godel will be present at the next meeting which will be held sometimes in June. A date will be set later.

A resolution was drawn up concerning farm aid to farmers and is to be sent to the local member of parliament, Jack Bigg.

Eight new members joined the FUA. A lunch was served and the evening was spent in various discussions.

It's surprising how few breaks really deserving people sometimes get.

Your Job Can Affect Your Spine

By Dr. K. W. Tenove, Chiropractor

What is your occupational disease? You have one, you know. Everyone does! Don't think that only painters, who suffer the effects of paint fumes, or miners, or others engaged in hazardous jobs, are the only ones whose daily tasks give them kinks or quirks that make for ill health. Chances are you're uncomfortable right now because of something you do practically every day of your life.

Maybe you're a butcher. Your nemesis is neuritis of the arm, or arthritis. Or you're a school teacher whose occupational plague is recurrent headaches. Or a lawyer, a newspaperman or press agent, with the classic ailments of stomach ulcers or nervous indigestion.

The point is that in our present state of civilization the human body is constantly subjected to stresses and strains. That's why everybody has an occupational disease—even in the most "genteel" of occupations.

The remedy is obvious: regular visits to your chiropractor, to keep your spine in line. You can't travel far with a weak backbone.

The Grand canal of China is the longest in the world.

THE Homemaker

By BERTHA M. McCUTCHEON

Northland Utilities offers the following suggestions for safe operation of electrical equipment.

Today approved electrical equipment is safe when installed, maintained and properly used. Unfortunately, hazards are created when it is improperly used or when suitable safety measures are not employed.

B. McCutcheon

Electrical hazards are of concern to people of all ages for electricity plays no favorites. The young child, the teenagers, adults and elderly folks—all are exposed—every day—to possible accidents involving electricity.

And when electrical accidents do take place they are most likely to cause shock, burns or fire. That's why most of the following electrical safety suggestions concern these types of accidents.

Don't use electrical space heaters, radios or appliances in the bathroom, laundry room or near the kitchen sink.

Replace frayed appliance cords, or defective wiring on lamps as soon as discovered.

Disconnect such appliances as irons and toasters as soon as you have finished using them.

Don't install base plugs or electrical wiring unless you are qualified to do so.

If you blow fuses often, have a repairman check the reason why.

In bathrooms, kitchens and laundries, where a person is likely to have wet hands or be standing on wet surfaces, handles and cover plates of wall switches and outlets should be of insulated materials. Light pull chains should have an insulated link about one inch from the opening of the shell.

Are there unused base plugs in your home? If so, cover them so children cannot poke pins, etc., into them.

An electric heating pad is often a real "blessing", but don't go to sleep without first turning it off. Cautions such as "do not wet" or "do not use pins" should be strictly observed.

When you are using electric appliances near grounded metal, such as water pipe or radiator, avoid touching both at the same time. If there is a defect in this appliance, a shock could result.

Toasters need cleaning often—but be sure to disconnect them first.

Don't use two or more electric heating appliances (toaster, fry pan, etc.) on the same circuit unless an electrician has certified the wires are large enough to accommodate the current of both appliances.

In the laundry room, standing on dry boards or wearing rubbers helps to keep the feet dry and thus reduces the possibility of shock.

Appliances should be connected directly to outlets in the wall. Drop cords, lamp cords and extension cords are usually designed with wires of too small capacity to properly accommodate appliances.

Radiant heaters should be placed where they cannot be knocked over or ignite bed clothes, curtains, etc.

Never use an extension cord as substitute for permanent wiring.

The nighthawk, giving its nasal cry as it swirls over cities, is a thoroughly misnamed bird. It is not a hawk at all, but a member of the bird family called goatsuckers. And none of the family sucks goats.

Premier Praises MLA For Service

Premier Manning made the presentation to Floyd Baker, Clover Bar MLA, of an electric saw and drill outfit on behalf of the SC Association in Mr. Baker's riding. This was prefaced by the following remarks:

Mr. Chairman, Floyd and Mrs Baker, Friends:

I am sure Floyd, tonight as you have listened to this fascinating story of your experiences with the Social Credit movement and the people of your Constituency for the last twenty-five years, it must have brought back to you many very pleasant memories indeed—varied and interesting times that you have known in that quarter of a century.

Many of us here tonight who were privileged to know you in those early years can re ive with you a lot of the experiences that this record has brought back to your mind. I think it wouldn't be inappropriate, after the passage of all of these years, to let you and the other two gent emen who were nominees with you in that first election of 1935 who appeared before the Advisory Board (as recorded a little while earlier)—to let you know how you came to be picked instead of them. Now I happen to have been a member of that Advisory Board, so this is the first time the inside story has ever been told. You see, when Floyd walked into the hall that day where the Advisory Board was gathered, as soon as he took off his hat, we took one look at him and we knew he was the fella that was going to "come out on top"—and he sure did, and he's been doing it ever since!

The story is told of a great French general many years ago, who when he received his appointment was very roundly cheered and applauded by his troops and his friends. The wise old general said: "I appreciate what you say of me now, but I'll be far more interested to know what you say of me after together we have tasted the heat of battle." I think, Floyd, that what you have heard here tonight, in the presence of all of these friends here, after twenty-five years of service in the Legislature, to the Province on behalf of your people, in their communities and in their homes, is probably the greatest tribute that can possibly be paid to any man in public life or anywhere else.

These people who are doing you honor tonight and those whose voices were recorded because they couldn't be here, are speaking to you now in the light of more than twenty-five years of personal experience, by which they have measured your steadfastness, your faithfulness, your friendship, your untiring zeal in applying yourself to their interests far beyond the ordinary call of duty.

May I say to you personally, Floyd, as one who has known you since the 1935 election, and has been with you in the Legislature all of those twenty-five years, I have never known any representative anywhere in the field of democratic government, who has been more conscientious, more zealous or more untiring in their efforts to do the right thing, the honorable thing, the proper thing, for those they represented, or the community and Province they served, than you have done throughout all of those years. Your presence in the Legislature, your co operation, your willingness a ways to take on work far beyond what you would ordinarily be expected to take on, has always been to me a tremendous encouragement and inspiration, and I know it has been to all the other members of the government in the Legislature.

Now Floyd, tonight, just as a little expression of the heartfelt thanks of all the people of your Constituency, and also as a token voicing their very best wishes for many more vigorous and happy years with your gracious wife and your charming family and all these wonderful grandchildren that you are privileged to have the opportunity to spoil—it's my very, very great privilege to present to you, on behalf of all of your people, a little token of their esteem, that carries with it all of these good wishes and all of these hopes for your happiness in the years to come. I am going to ask Mr. Miller if he would just part the curtains and roll out for your observation this token of their appreciation. Floyd, if you will come up here . . .

I would like to say while this is being rolled out that Floyd is a great hobbyist and a great carpenter on top of that—so that tonight his Constituency friends are equipping him with something that they, and all of us, are certain he will enjoy and of which we know he will make great use and get a lot of pleasure out of in the days to come.

At Fort Saskatchewan Rally:

F. Baker Thrilled By Takeoff On TV's "This Is Your Life"

By KEN LARSON

As he shook hands with hundreds of people at the mammoth rally in Fort Saskatchewan held in his honor, Floyd Baker, MLA for the Clover Bar constituency, surprised a good many by calling them by name. He was described as a "humble man," one who is able to mingle with people, the net result of his personal interest being that his constituents have kept him in the legislature under the Social Credit standard for 25 continuous years.

There were many times during verbal tributes paid to him, and his wife, Stella, that he raised his spectacles, and wiped away a joyful tear. There were other moments when his natural vitality and buoyancy sprung to the fore as he joined in the fun of the night.

Joe Miller, Ardrossan, president of the Clover Bar Social Credit Association, was meeting chairman, and introduced Orvis Kennedy, president of the Social Credit League of Alberta, who was master of ceremonies for the portion known as "This Is Your Life in Social Credit, Floyd Baker."

This takeoff on Ralph Edward's American TV program, "This Is Your Life," was an outstanding success. In a leather - covered "scrapbook" were written many of the highlights in Mr. Baker's life, particularly those associated with the early days of the Socred movement and up to the present time. This was read by Mr. Kennedy who paused as tape-recorded messages were introduced and then the "voices" appeared on stage to greet Mr. and Mrs. Baker.

Mrs. Baker, who had played an active part in the planning of the "surprise party," was herself surprised when she was presented with a beautiful scenic oil painting by the German artist, Kurt Moser. Mr. Baker's interest in woodwork was apparently well-known to the committee preparing the gift for him, because he received an elaborate Comet electric all-job saw and drill workshop outfit.

The prize surprise of the evening was the presentation of a cheque to Mr. Baker for a brand new European car. This went along with a kiss from the donor, Dr. Stacia B. Whistler, New York City, sister of Mr. Baker. Her coming to Edmonton was also a well-kept secret.

There were a gift of an electric coffee-maker from his sons and daughters and an engraved silver plate from the 4-H clubs. A silver anniversary cake decorated the head table as lunch was served afterwards, but with all the excitement everyone forgot to have the guest of honor and his "bride" cut the cake in formal fashion.

ORVIS KENNEDY

A variety show staged by the high school students preceded the special program for the Bakers, and was received with appreciation by the large audience, as well as Mr. Baker who expressed his pleasure at the splendid performance by all cast members.

CLOVER BAR MLA SURPRISED:

"NEVER THOUGHT IT WOULD HAPPEN TO US" – F. BAKER

At the mammoth rally held in honor of 25 years of continuous service by Floyd Baker, MLA for the Clover Bar constituency, Mr. Baker expressed his appreciation for tributes paid him by saying:

You have heard about people having butterflies in their stomachs — and this isn't a good place for a fellow with a weak heart, I can assure you! We have often listened on TV to the program "This is Your Life". Never once did we think that it would ever happen to us.

Tonight has been one of the greatest experiences of my life — to be kept in the dark about all this wonderful evening that you people have been planning for us— to have all these wonderful things you have done for us — almost makes me speechless. However, I am gathering myself together a bit now, and I would like to say this. Words just don't come to me to express my heartfelt feelings for the wonderful things you have done, for all the hard work you have done to make this evening such a success.

All I have ever tried to do since 1935 is to be the people's public servant — to try and serve them as best I could. Stella and I have decided, some long time ago, to spend the rest of our lives in this way. We want you people to know that we are always willing to help you in any way we can. We are not concerned with business any more, we have given up our business — our home is always open to our people — so do not be afraid to come to us — some people say "Oh you're too busy" — Never say that — we have as much time as any of you have and we are willing to spend our time, for perhaps the next 25 years, God-willing — to look after you and serve you better than we have before.

I would never have carried on the work we have been doing without my team-mate, my good wife Stella. She has been my private secretary before she was married and she still is my private secretary — helping me in every way. When we have two meetings booked for a night — she takes one. She's a better speaker than I am.

Mr. Baker then thanked everyone — Orvis A. Kennedy and those who worked with him to make the evening a success; the constituency association members; Joe Miller, its president; and all the people who turned out to honor him and the artists who presented such a fine program at the beginning of the evening.

Edmonton Mill Rate Set At 63

Council has struck Edmonton's 1960 tax rate at 63 mills, trimming 2½ mills from the 65½ recommended by commissioners.

The 1959 rate was 61 mills.

The tax bill of the average Edmonton householder will go up by about $6 to $7. Tax notices should soon be in the mail. Council asked commissioners to recommend to council where reductions can be made in departmental spending, to study a proposed increase in city telephone rates and "to make any other suggestions" for cutting expenditures.

The Edmonton Public School Board will be asked to consider slashing its $12, 567,601 requisition by about $330,000.

The Three Faces Of Eve

Chapter 10

By Corbett H. Thigpen, M.D., and Hervey M. Cleckley, M.D.

Jane looked no more like circumspect Eve White than like that shallow, boisterous scamp, her willful, provocative, and ever-coquettish alternate.

One did not have to ask questions or put to any test this clearly civilized and unaffected feminine apparition to know that the trivialities and loud capers of Eve Black would hold for her no attraction. Though these eyes never flashed with the vivacity characteristic of Eve Black, they seemed to reflect a disciplined vitality, an ease, and a range of feeling beyond the reach of Eve White's utterly genuine but circumscribed reactions.

Jane's face had its own alert and thoughtful expression. Unlike Eve White she could laugh, and her smile was fresh and lovely. She had the face of a woman whose interests might extend far beyond anything known to the other two.

Her posture in the chair suggested neither Eve White's tense decorum nor her alternate's semi-adolescent, almost lascivious repose.

Just as Eve Black gave the illusory but vivid impression of being richer-blooded, better-fleshed, and more rounded than Eve White, so Jane seemed a little taller when she stood, more lightly erect, more capable of command. Her gait and movements were her own, unobtrusively and perfectly feminine.

JANE KNEW BOTH

Mrs. White was little likely to draw boldly inquisitive glances from men on street corners. Everything about Eve Black seemed designed specifically to attract such attention.

Though many polite eyes were likely to note with appreciation Jane's progress along any sidewalk, even a fool would automatically restrain his impuse to whistle.

Neither Eve knew that a third manifestation had emerged. Jane, however, enjoyed access to each of the other consciousnesses during its periods of prevalence.

Within a week she had, as an unparticipating spectator, so to speak, accompanied Eve Black to the dance halls. She had also attended Eve White at work and followed sympathetically this mother's longing thoughts about her daughter she had appreciated without sharing personally, her loneliness, her gentle courage, and her deep background of insecurity and fear, and her sense of impending doom.

She soon learned a good many details of Eve White's work. This did not bore her as it did Eve Black. And she reported with utter, detachment, but with civilized amusement, various rowdy witticisms, and lusty incidents that emerged among the groups Eve Black encountered when she was out for the evening.

OTHERS UNAWARE

The therapist wondered at first if Eve Black had knowledge, or at least some suspicion of this new presence. It would not be unlike her to withhold such information either for purposes of evasion or for simple amusement she might derive from seeing the doctor hoodwinked. But in time it seemed plain that she, like Eve White, was unaware of the intruder.

After considerable acquaintance with Jane had impressed him with her qualities and viewpoints, the therapist decided to make her existence known to Eve White.

Jane agreed to do what she could do to communicate with the other, to try, by whatever complex or ambiguous means might be available, to convey a sense of her friendly presence. It was decided that Jane make this effort at the moment when the physician decided to inform Eve White about her new invisible sister.

Jane was accurately described to Eve White as a capable and intelligent functional entity, as a sympathetic and understanding possible resource, as one in whom she might find a powerful ally.

SEEMED TO UNDERSTAND

Eve White seemed to obtain some convincing realization of Jane—not as part of her own being, but as a proximate entity, unperceived but for the moment somehow intimate and of profound significance.

Before the wonder and astonishment had faded from her pale face before the tentative voice of Eve White could make its first comment on the experience, the tone sharply changed and Eve Black burst out suddenly and unbidden

With a vehement and disdainful toss of her head she sprang from the chair and strode across the room. With her back to the physician she stood for a moment with a hand on each hip. Turning she approached him, wrath and indignation on her face, her eyes flashing now not in jest or coquetry.

"What in hell's this all about?" she shouted. "I might've knowed you and she'd cook up somethin fishy . . . You and her and all your fine honorable airs!"

GESTURE OF CONTEMPT

In her hot vexation she turned her head and emphatically mimicked the act of spitting in a gesture of contempt. The peak of her anger passed quickly. Taking a seat on the arm of her chair she faced the physician, still with the air of one unjustly aggrieved but with a little of her habitual cajolery now returning.

"All right now, give me the straight of it," she demanded. "What about this Jane business? What about it, Doc? I've got the right to know!"

Though she became somewhat mollified as her questions were answered, it was plain that she disliked the new situation. As a person whose ways and capacities she well knew, Eve White was a rival with whom Eve Black felt she could easily cope. This stranger, whose thought and action lay well outside the scope of her awareness, was another matter.

During the eleven months in which all three carried out their separate careers, Eve Black was never able to displace Jane's consciousness, nor could Jane be called out by the physician when Eve Black was present.

FOR BRIEF PERIODS

Jane soon found herself spontaneously alternating with Eve White. At first without volition or forewarning, she came forth for brief periods during the times when the gentle Eve was in control. A little later she often found it possible to come out intentionally. By then she had learned enough about the other's office work and other responsibilities to carry on successfully whatever Eve White had been doing.

Although Jane did not find it possible ordinarily to emerge at her own behest when Eve Black was in control, on one or two occasions she apparently did accomplish this. Eve White, however, may have momentarily replaced Eve Black's dominance to provide the means of outlet for her.

Jane's knowledge expanded rapidly. At first she reported only the immediate thought and reactions of that Eve who was conscious and available to her. When they recalled and thought upon incidents in the past, Jane also was made aware of these incidents.

She soon gained considerable scattered and unrelated information in this way about events that occurred before her recent birth into selfhood. Though unable to summon or command the memory of either, and by this means make unrestricted explorations of her own, she nevertheless collected carefully the data that cumulatively became available and used it skillfully to orient herself.

AFFECTION

Neither the present nor the past experience of either Eve impressed her in any way as belonging to herself. She steadily developed an increasing affection and compassion for Eve White, and finally what seemed to be a devoted but one-sided intimacy: but she was seldom intolerant toward Eve Black or vigorously critical of her frivolous conduct.

Despite her unfailing poise and maturity of judgment, Jane, particularly in the early weeks of her career, often showed a specific naivete quite her own. Her reactions suggested that all experience was so new and fresh that even the most commonplace matters glowed with a novelty and charm invisible to the ordinary adult.

Her rapid acquisition of knowledge suggested that beyond or beneath the limits of her awareness lay considerable resources not yet her own but which bit by bit would become more available.

Though at first George Washington's name held no significance for her, a few sentences of information about this historic figure brought within her grasp a good deal more about the American Revolution and its chief figures.

HUMOR, CONFIDENCE

In some respects she seemed like a person who 15 years ago in college had mastered Latin but who since that time had never seen a Latin word. Such a person if called upon again to exercise his thoroughly atrophied faculties, would reacquire the lost knowledge with a facility and acceleration impossible to a true beginner. In some respects such an example suggests what we encountered in Jane, but not in all respects.

Information that Jane acquired was often of the sort that could have been furnished by the two Eves. Other material seemed to emerge at the stimulus of some clue from resources not available to either of them.

Jane's interests, her viewpoints and attitudes, her tastes and inclinations, all her personal reactions, consistently indicated a disparate entity, another being whose experience remained apart from that of the others. All her behavior was constructive and socially acceptable. In contrast with Eve White she displayed ingenuity, humor, and confidence.

NEXT WEEK Jane observes Eve White in a dramatic and moving experience. (From the book "The Three Faces of Eve," copyright 1959 by Corbett H. Thigpen and Hervey M. Cleckley, and published by McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc.). Distributed by The Register and Tribune Syndicate.

"ALL RIGHT NOW, give me the straight of it," Eve Black demanded. "What about this Jane business? What about it, Doc? I've got a right to know!"—Illustration from the 20th Century-Fox motion picture "The Three Faces of Eve".

Increase Appropriation For New Playground Equipment In County

The salary negotiating committee met with the teachers' committee on Monday, April 11, and reported the teachers' proposal to the school committee for information and discussion. The salary negotiating committee was authorized to negotiate within the limits of the schedule recognized by the Alberta School Trustees' Association, Zone 2.

Norman Jack, of Colinton, met the school committee re the purchase of the former school division office building at Colinton. No decision was made.

The committee is revising the playground equipment in the county. The appropriation has been increased from 25c to 75c per pupil per year. This should speed up provision of playground equipment to a point where most of the children can participate.

The appointment of the various sub-committees of the school committee were made.

Salary Negotiating Committee: E. Parr, R. Remley, A. Aloisio, E. Loxam; Property Management: V. Breckenridge, chairman; E. Loxam, R. Remley; Conveyance: the chairman and the member concerned.

Bob Remley was elected vice-chairman of the school committee.

E. Parr was appointed county representative to the Alberta School Trustees' Association Zone 2.

It has been the custom for several years for the school division to play host to the local students attending the faculty of education in the University of Alberta for a dinner. This was held this year at the Corona Hotel, March 31. There are 21 teachers in training from this area, thirteen of whom are bursary students and seven of whom will be on our staff next year. The others will be returning to the University for further training.

"INTERNSHIP" PROGRAM

It was reported that an "internship" program for beginning teachers will be implemented May 1, 1960. The new teachers will spend six weeks in the classroom with another teacher. It has been worked in other areas with much success, but this is the first time it has been tried here.

Don Galovich, of Richmond Park, will be attending the annual principals' leadership course during the summer months.

A teachers' institute for all teachers Grade 1 to 6 will be held in the Lower Campus school on May 13. A reading specialist, Miss Alice Heenan, reading consultant for Gage and Co., book publishers, will be in attendance.

Considerable time was spent on a tentative budget, which will be presented to the county council for approval.

Sketch plans were submitted and approved for the addition to the Smith school, and a recommendation made to the county council to make the necessary by-law arrangements.

Approval was given to convert a portion of the lower school playroom into two classrooms, retaining the audio-visual aids room and half will still be available for play room. This arrangement is expected to be of a temporary nature.

The county council met on Thursday, April 14, with all members in attendance.

LENGTHY DISCUSSION

There was a lengthy discussion in regard to the Bartoshewsky road complaint. Considerable correspondence on the matter was read. The delegation reported that in their opinion the run off was from the northwest to the southeast into the muskeg.

The financial report was read.

Following adjournment for lunch the accounts were considered and approved. These were interrupted at two o'clock when the forest superintendent of Lac la Biche division, Mr. Coast, met the council by appointment. He explained the difficulties experienced in controlling fires and even in definitely locating fires which were on the fringe area between the Improvement Districts and the county. He explained how the tower men were able to locate fires in a general way, but due to the location of these towers, some fires were in too much of a straight line from the tower to be easily pinpointed.

He explained that he wished to co-operate with the county in hiring patrols for the spring and fall, who would issue fire permits and keep his department fully informed at all times of the situation. The department would supply him with all the necessary equipment, and pay half the cost.

FIRE PROPOSAL

After listening to the proposal, it seemed good to the council, and a motion was made to enter into an agreement with the department of lands and forests for the prevention of fires in the district. Two men will be hired in the area adjacent to Lac la Biche division.

It seemed like such an efficient idea, there was talk of contacting the department at Slave Lake, and endeavoring to enter into an agreement which would cover the county on the west side as well.

There were three other delegations: John Good, of Ellscott; Fred and William Harband, of Athabasca; and William Royko, of Colinton. After receiving them, the council returned to the business of the accounts.

Fred Renneman, of Donatville, requested permission to run a ditch along a road allowance in order to help drain his hay field. The council assured him there was work planned for the area this year, and it would be looked after.

After some consultation with maps, and some discussion, the council will sell to the people of Colinton, an area 100 feet north and south, for the length of the property taken from the old school grounds and adjacent to the curling rink property.
